CONTINUITY OF CARE

QUALITY IN-HOME CARE

Saying Goodnight

By Dave Murphy

My wife – SK – usually helps mom with the final steps before bed. I have mom for most of every day, so the evening help from SK is invaluable.

Before bed, mom needs several sets of medications including a nebulizer breathing treatment. Then comes dental care which is more complicated for mom due to dry mouth caused by all her meds. With mom's memory issues, she needs close monitoring or she'd skip the dental care completely, much less stay at it for the time the dentist recommends. But each evening, she laughs when we mention we'll help, as if we're suggesting she needs us for the first time. We've been helping for well over a year.

After the nightly dental adventure, I give mom time to get into bed. Then I go up to say goodnight in what's become ritual. Mom is always curled onto one side with just enough room for me to sit on the edge of her bed.

We've never been a touchy-feely family. Saying, "I love you" or hugs and kisses were infrequently extended. But since mom had pneumonia last fall and we were told she might not wake up, I've wanted each day to end with some form of touch and an "I love you."

So I take my place at the edge of mom's bed. I speak so she knows I'm there as I touch her shoulder. A day never passes that she doesn't tell me how badly she feels or questions why she's still here. But with each night she tells me it was a good day. I hug her, tell her I love her and usually she returns the effort.

And then I'm back in time, nearly half a century earlier. I'm back to when I was nine and dad collapsed in front of me before dying hours later.

From Our Home To Yours...

Hello Friends, happy anniversary! Comfort Keepers of Northern Lower Michigan is ten years old this month. We are planning to celebrate by honoring special seniors who are nominated by you to be the recipient of a Golden Wish®. You'll find more information on that inside. As we were planning this issue of Northern Comfort, we wanted to share a story that illustrates why we are so passionate about this field of serving seniors and their family caregivers.

That's why we are so pleased to introduce Dave Murphy, a writer and caregiver to his 91-year old and dementia-impaired mother. Dave recently launched a website where he shares stories about relationships, caregiving, and how these experiences bring past and present together. I know you will enjoy meeting 'Ma Murph' when you read Dave's story. She is just the kind of person we hope to see honored with a Golden Wish. Please check out Dave's web site www.sonofamom.com for more great reading.

It has been our privilege over the last ten years to assist hundreds of families across the region with transitions of all kinds. No two people or families we have cared for are exactly alike, and we have learned from each and every experience. But as unique as each of us is, we share a common journey as we age, and it's good to have support along the way. Here's to many more years of service, learning and making a difference.

Saying Goodnight

My nightmares began right after his death. Mom would come to my room and sit on the edge of my bed to comfort me. That became ritual for a year or two. Some nights she'd lie down beside me and fall asleep out of exhaustion from her single-parenting duties. But I'd always hear her when she'd get up to go to her room.

I'm not going to paint the picture that mom did absolutely everything right. She was human and made mistakes. But her effort and intentions were extraordinary. I found out much later in life that mom's income was below the poverty line for our family size. But I never felt a sense of want.

I was mom's youngest and we were always close. After mom's long work career and a remarkable life of giving to others, SK and I moved mom near us when she was in her early 70s. Then unexpectedly, grandma moved in with mom. For the last six years of grandma's life and up until mom was 77-years old, mom was grandma's caregiver.

Today, mom is 91-years old and has advanced dementia. With a home office, I'm able to be her primary caregiver. It's rewarding but challenging. Sometimes I feel overwhelmed.

I write about our experiences, certainly to share with others, but also to find meaning for myself. The stories are sometimes humorous, other times poignant. The flashbacks are frequent and almost electric. Anything from a glance, to a fragrance, to a phrase can open up a portal to the past, just like my goodnight ritual seems to be an echo from when dad died and mom helped keep the nightmares away. Usually I begin a story as a process of discovery as opposed to having a clue about how I'll wrap it up.

I look forward to SK taking over those final nighttime duties – a luxury mom didn't have with me when I was a child – so I don't have to spend morning to night coaxing mom to stay on task. Only through this experience have I learned that sometimes you have to stop being a caregiver so you can once again be family.

Caregiving can be exhausting. I'm sure that single parenting was for mom, too.

I hope my goodnights do something to set the world right each evening. Like the stories I write, I'm discovering something about this passage every day.

6 Tips for a Better Burger

Burgers get a bum rap for being unhealthy, and healthier burgers have the reputation of being bland and dry. Here are 6 tips to make a healthy burger taste great.

1 Add flavor and moisture to lean burgers by incorporating other ingredients into the meat mixture, such as sauteed onions and bell peppers.

2 Don't overwork the meat. If you're adding seasoning or other ingredients to the meat itself, mix it just until everything is incorporated.

3 Don't just sprinkle your formed burgers with salt and pepper—mix seasonings into the meat as well.

4 Adding a leaner, neutral-tasting meat like turkey to a fattier cut like lamb reduces saturated fat and cholesterol.

5 Chicken and turkey burgers are often leaner, but not very visually appealing. Adding colorful herbs and spices like paprika, cilantro and parsley increases their visual appeal and adds flavor.

6 Get creative and use the flavor combinations in your favorite ethnic foods to season burgers. For example, if you're a huge fan of Mexican food, try adding chile powder and cumin to your burger and top it with pepper Jack cheese and salsa.
